Helpful Hint.

An emergency bag is a very convenient addition to the medicine closet; it should be made of two strips of heavy linen or denim, about six or seven inches deep, the back piece to be made about 18 inches long and the front 27 inches; the two strips should be bound together at the ends and across the bottom, then stitched to form several pockets (eight or nine); a flap should be buttoned over the top and each pocket labeled with indelible ink. One pocket should contain rolls of bandages, another bits of old soft linen, another lint from worn-out napkins; other pockets should be made to hold bottles of arnica, witch-hazel, carbolic, Jamaica ginger, absorbent cotton, a box of healing salve, a piece of castile soap, and one-half dozen fingers cut from old, large kid gloves.

JUST ONE MINUTE LATE

By IZOLA FORRESTER.

All the way up the bay Gregory wondered if she was still alive. The wireless brief had reached him two days out from England and he had sent back word that he was already on the way. He had even half believed that very thing would serve to strengthen her, that he had started before she had sent for him. He had been four months in the prison camps before the exchange had been brought about. Probably she had believed he was dead. Nearly all the poor devils in his crowd had died sooner or later. And he had come out of it with a smashed arm that let him off for awhile from the game over yonder.

He wondered how Barbara had found out he was sailing on the Tavnina. He had only told Lester. Yet the message had been clear and potent: "Come before it is too late. Bab." His arm pained him constantly, and through the long nights he lay in his berth trying to visualize Bab's face and find comfort from it. She had been such a tender little woman, after all her own personal trouble. The only kind thing Kenneth had ever done for her was to die. That had been four years ago, and he and Lester had looked after her interests since then. They had been partners before the war, and he was her brother.

The war had been a relief. At first they had gone over to serve in the Belgian commission. Lester had pulled himself together and got his grip back driving an ambulance there, and he himself had slipped into the Foreign Legion.

When the train pulled into the express station at Seventy-second street he almost stumbled from the car. Gee, but everything looked good after those months in Belgium. He crossed the street and went toward her home in the big apartment building on Central Park West. His fingers were a bit unsteady as he found the bell and pressed it. The door clicked and he went upstairs. And on his way a man passed him going down.

Gregory noticed him vaguely. He was short and stocky and looked prosperous. Even to a casual observer he appeared happy. And as he started past him the man stopped short, took another look at him and called: "Hello, there, Greg!"

It was Stephens, his lawyer, good old Steve who had stood back of him over and over again, about the only friend he had had left after the business had gone to the merry puppy dogs. Yet all he could do was grip his hand and ask if Bab were still alive.

"Still alive? What do you mean, old man? Of course, she's alive, but you're one minute too late. She's done it."

"Done what? Married again?"

"Lord, no. Go upstairs and find out. God bless you both. Wonderful woman, Greg. See you later."

Gregory climbed the last flight and she opened the door herself. Not a word did she speak, only held out her arms to him, and somehow he found that it was his head which lay on her shoulder and he was holding her to him in dumb joy.

"I met Stephens. He said I was too late," he said finally when they were in her library.

"You are. I signed the papers myself. Listen and don't scold me. Lester wrote when you got back to England and kept me posted, but he said he thought you'd go back to France if your arm was well enough, and I think you've done quite enough for them already. I need a little of you, you know. So I sent the wireless to head you off, and, anyway, we needed you terribly. You see, I found out after you had been captured all about Lester's trouble and why my balance was safe and yours had gone with him. It had been splendid of you to back him in all his queer ideas anyway, so I went out one day to Jersey and looked over the old factory just as you had left it. You know I studied chemistry with Lester before I was married and it all interested me so. So I just took out part of my money and started in a small way. I told Mr. Stephens what I wanted to do, and he helped me, but I said it was your money. Well, I won out, and began making copper cylinders just as you had intended. So, I—I just paid off the mortgage myself. Mr. Stephens has the check. I think I'm even with you now. It's all over there ready for you to go back to."

Gregory was holding her in his good arm, close to him, his face pressed to her hair.

"Oh, you women, you women who are the restorers!" he said.

To Make Metallic Magnesium.
A factory has been established at Niagara Falls for the manufacture of metallic magnesium, which is the lightest metal known, and is said to have many qualities superior to aluminum. The output of the factory has been contracted for by the French government until the end of the war, the material to be made use of in the manufacture of aeroplane parts. After the demand for this purpose has ceased the company will engage in the manufacture of household utensils, and some interesting novelties will be brought out, it is said.

WAR! What Is It All About?

HAS the whole world gone stark mad over a very foolish and trivial question? Are swords rattling, cannon rumbling, mailed armor clashing just because Russia wanted to show her love for the little brother—Serbia? Tear aside the curtain of Europe's politics and see the grim and sinister game of chess that is being played. See upon what a slim, yet desperate, excuse the sacred lives of millions are being sacrificed. Read the history of the past one hundred years, as written by some of the greatest authorities the world has ever known, and learn the naked, shameful truth. Just to get you started as a Review of Reviews subscriber, we make you this extraordinary offer. We will give to you

FREE—"Europe at War"

A big book and over 300 pages, size 10 x 7 inches, handsomely and durably bound in cloth, containing the dramatic history of the great events leading up to the present time; over 50 important and timely special articles by experts on the different phases of the conflict; hundreds of graphic pictures, portraits, photographs, diagrams, specially drawn war maps, illuminating statistical records, copies of official documents and diplomatic messages exchanged between the powers—a clear, vivid, accurate, permanent, interesting and valuable record—a record which once seen you will not willingly be without. Europe's past and present are here dramatically pictured and presented. Hundreds of illustrations graphically tell their own stories. More fascinating than any romance, here is a history so vivid, so dramatic, so stirring, so fascinating, so realistic, so wonderfully presented, so thrillingly told that it leaves an ineffable impression.
